

How to Support Your Child's School

- Ask your child about school success daily.
- Reward your child's school efforts, progress and successes.
- Read / be with your child. Look at books, magazine, newspaper together
- Limit passive activities, like TV.
- Communicate openly and respectfully with your teacher. Make sure that both you and your teacher are aware of your child's needs.
- Avoid making negative comments that could affect your teachers/school's ability to work effectively with your child.
- District policy states that conflict/ disagreements with your child's teacher should be handled first with the teacher before pursuing other avenues. Talk to your child's teacher; try to reason things out before seeking other avenues of assistance. Remember that teachers and parents, who present a united front with the best interests of the child as the goal, stand to create a working relationship that will positively affect the child's success in school and in life .
- Volunteer your time at the school helping out whenever you can and in whatever small way you can.
